National Horticultural Fair to showcase innovation

Our Bureau
Bengaluru

“Innovative Horticulture for Self Reliance” will be the theme of the four-day National Horticultural Fair (NHF) 2023 being organised in Bengaluru from February 22.

The fair, being organised by the ICAR-Indian Institute of Horticultural Research, will showcase and demonstrate the latest technologies for the production and processing of horticultural crops such as fruits, vegetables, flowers and medicinal crops with a focus on import substitution, said Sanjay Kumar Singh, Director, ICAR-IIHR.

The sixth edition of the NHF 2023 is being organised in collaboration with the Society for Promotion of Horticulture (SPH), BESST-Hort, a technology business incubator of ICAR-IIHR, the ICAR-ATARI, Bengaluru and leading development departments serving for the promotion of horticulture.

Over 50,000 farmers and around 250 exhibitors are expected to participate in NHF 2023, which will also showcase the innovation and value addition in millets, considering that 2023 is being observed as the International Year of Millets, Singh said.

SHOWCASING NEW TECH
Newer technologies relating to pollination in protected cultivation, leaf curl virus resistant chilli varieties, carotenoid rich marigold varieties among others developed by the ICAR-IIHR will be showcased and demonstrated to the farmers at the fair, Singh said.

C Aswath, Vice-President, SPH, said techniques developed to utilise flower waste, terrace gardening, urban horticulture, production technologies for exotic fruits such as dragon fruit and avocado and cost-effective traps for pest management among others for the benefit of growers, horticulturists and other stakeholders will be on display at the fair.

COVER STORY

India's best life insurance plans

By Ashish Menon, Omkar Vasudev Bhat, Sahiba Kaur Arora & Ravi Banagere. Inputs from Maushami Singh.

COVER STORY

Unsung heroes rarely get the attention they deserve. They do their job better, are the lifeblood of any ecosystem, but remain criminally hidden in plain sight. The good-old life term plans are one such example. If someone received secondary treatment, it was them. But that's all about to change now.

Thanks to this year's Union Budget, the government will impose a tax on proceeds of life-insurance plans with a premium value of over ₹5 lakh. With one blow, the government has broken the back of the insurance industry's popular (though inferior) vehicle – moneyback/endowment plans.

Unit-linked insurance plans (ULIPs) – the third wheel of the life-insurance industry – escaped the hammer this time, as the provision to tax returns from ULIPs with a premium of more than ₹2.5 lakh has already been introduced in 2021. ULIPs are structurally flawed and offer poor returns to investors. Bluntly speaking, they are useless. That's another reason why term plans should be your go-to option. Although poorly promoted by insurers and distributors due to slim commissions, their merits far outweigh those of ULIPs and endowment plans. Term plans help you get a large cover at a low cost. Thankfully, the turf war is on the verge of getting settled and the cream of term plans is finally rising to the top.

How we decided on the best distilling the best term plans for you. We restricted our research to only pure term plans which offer sufficient flexibility in (a) sum assured and (b) policy tenure, and (c) which provided the regular premium-payment option. We also ensured the insurance company had an adequate track record. Finally, to ensure their premiums can be compared easily, we limited ourselves to only those insurers that offer online term plans.

A total of 19 plans across 15 insurers made the cut. We eliminated them based on the first and second criteria below and ranked them on the basis of the third:
1. Claim-settlement ratio and benefit amount were important metrics to decide an insurer's track record of honouring claims in a timely fashion.

2. We identified insurers who can continue honouring claims in the future. We did so by looking at their solvency ratio.

3. And we looked at plans that had affordable premiums.

Based on these criteria, we have a list of nine insurers that meet our minimum requirements. Since premiums vary widely across age brackets, we have ranked the term plans in three categories. See the graphic 'Best term-insurance plans by age brackets'.

Our top picks

We have ranked the term plans assuming you have a sum assured of ₹1 crore until the age of 60. Here, term plans with lower premiums have scored higher on our ratings. Two of the most prominent names in the insurance space are missing from the list: SBI and HDFC. Their track record failed to meet our minimum threshold of 90 per cent settlement ratio in benefit-value terms. The rankings are purely based on premiums. You can opt for whichever insurer you feel suits you the best in terms of quality of service.

Life-insurance FAQs

Now that you know the best term plans, here's what you need to know about life insurance in general

1 Do you need life insurance?

It depends.

You need life insurance if:

- You are an earning member and have financial dependents.
- You are married and have dependents.
- You are a parent and have dependents.

On the other hand, life insurance is optional if:

- You are single and have no dependents.
- There is dual income and no kids.
- You are retired or are nearing retirement.

There are three approaches to arrive at how much life insurance you will need: need-based, human-life value and rule of thumb

2 How much life cover do you need?

There are three approaches to arrive at this point: need-based, human-life value and rule of thumb. Let's see them one by one.

Need-based approach

This is the amount your dependents would need in your absence. You can arrive at this amount by following the below calculation:

Outstanding debt (repayment of education/home/vehicle loans)	+
Short-term needs (emergency expenses in case of untimely death)	+
Lifetime living expenses of your dependents (monthly expenses, child's education, marriage, etc.)	-
Your expenses and investments

While estimating lifetime living expenses of your dependents, include the future value by considering inflation. For instance, you may choose to take 7 per cent for living costs, 12 per cent for higher education, etc. It is always better to take a slightly higher rate of inflation.

COVER STORY

Human-life-value approach

This figure would replace all the income that your loved ones will lose out on in your absence. You can arrive at this number by following the below calculation:

$$\frac{\text{Your potential income until retirement (assume your income will grow every year. Also take inflation into account)}}{\text{Your personal expenses and the premiums you pay}}$$

Do assume your income will grow every year. Also take inflation into account.

Rule-of-thumb approach

Here, you simply multiply your current annual income by 10-12 times.

Things you should know

- The thumb-rule approach is only meant to give you an estimate and not an accurate figure.
- Most insurance companies provide a 'human-life-value' calculator on their websites.
- The premium arrived at using the "Need" based approach would most probably be less than the "Income" based approach, as most people tend to live within their means.
- It is always better to be over-insured than under-insured.

3 Should you review the life coverage at any point?

Yes, you should, because circumstances in life keep changing. Over time, your income, liabilities (loans) and dependents (your children, for example) increase or decrease. Therefore, reassess your insurance amount to ensure your dependents have adequate protection.

Over time, your income, liabilities and dependents increase or decrease. Therefore, reassess your insurance amount from time to time.

tion. You may perhaps review your life coverage every five to seven years.

4 Do you need a life cover for the rest of your life?

No. There's no point having a life cover till 70-80-90 years of age. In such cases, you end up paying higher premiums. But for what purpose? If loss of income is the only consideration, your life insurance should last until retirement. In fact, if you think you won't have any financial dependents by 50, keep your life cover until that age. Here's why:

- Your children wouldn't be dependent on you then.
- You would have achieved most of your long-term goals.
- You would have racked up a retirement kitty as well.

5 Should you opt for 'return of premium' term plans?

You don't get a penny in return if you survive a regular term plan, a feature that may erroneously make you feel this is a bad option. On the other hand, a 'return of premium' term plan looks lucrative because it pays back the entire premium you paid for the life cover. But such plans come at a higher cost, about 80 to 100 per cent more.

Instead of paying such high premiums, it would be better to invest that extra money in a tax-saving mutual fund. Even an average fund would do the job. Here, you not only save tax each year but also grow wealth in the long run. Even if you follow the new tax regime, you can replace the tax-saving fund with any other equity-oriented mutual fund.

6 What is a zero-cost term plan and should you choose it?

It's a relatively new innovation in the industry and builds further on the idea of 'return of premium'. Here, you can either exit the policy and get the total premium back or continue the plan and not get anything in return if you survive.

There's a catch in the first option, though. The exit option is available only 15-20 years before the end of the term plan, which is a long time. Plus, these zero-cost term plans have a longer policy tenure (around 40 years) – something you don't really need (see FAQ 'Do you need a life cover for the rest of your life?').

7 Can you switch your life insurer?

You can't, unfortunately. There are no provisions that enable you to port a policy. And if you decide to, you would need to buy a fresh life cover and pay a higher premium due to age increase and a natural uptick in insurance premiums. We'll talk more about it in FAQ 'How to enhance your term-plan coverage at a later date'.

8 How to enhance your term-plan coverage at a later date?

You have three options here:

Option A: Consider a new policy if the existing one can't be enhanced

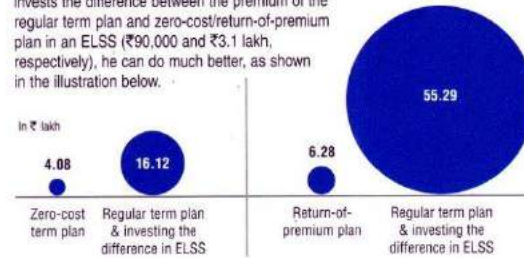

But that comes with a set of challenges.

- You may have to pay higher premiums because you will start a new policy at an older age.
- New medical conditions can complicate matters.
- Having two separate policies can be dif-

Regular term plan vs zero-cost term plan & return-of-premium term plan

Zero-cost and return-of-premium plans appear to be better than regular term plans as they return the premium amount. However, if one buys a regular term plan and invests the difference between the regular term plan and zero-cost/return-of-premium plan in an ELSS, the difference could be substantial.

For instance, consider an individual who is 30 and has a sum assured of ₹1 crore with a policy term of 30 years. The costs of the regular term plan, zero-cost term plan and return-of-premium plans for him are ₹3.18 lakh, ₹4.08 lakh and ₹6.28 lakh, respectively. The zero-cost plan and the return-of-premium term plans would return ₹4.08 lakh and ₹6.28 lakh, respectively, to him at the time of maturity. But if he buys the regular term plan for ₹3.18 lakh and invests the difference between the premium of the regular term plan and zero-cost/return-of-premium plan in an ELSS (₹90,000 and ₹3.1 lakh, respectively), he can do much better, as shown in the illustration below.

The comparison with an average ELSS fund is done assuming the policy started on Jan 1, 1996, and the value of the investment is as on Jan 31, 2023.

You can't switch your life insurer. There are no provisions that enable you to port a policy.

difficult to manage, as it requires double the amount of paperwork for your family to handle in your absence.

Option B: An increasing insurance-coverage plan

Better but more expensive than Option A, this type of coverage gradually grows over time, eliminating the need for new medical tests and the possibility of a rejected upgrade. However, the premium amount is usually higher in the initial years. That's because the insurance company has to consider the increasing coverage amount into account. Additionally, it depends on your health when purchasing the policy. In case they detect something, the premiums may get more expensive.

Option C: A life-stage increment plan (recommended)

A life-stage increment plan takes care of your needs as you grow older and has two major benefits:

- It allows your coverage to grow at critical moments in your life – marriage, childbirth, first home, etc. – without incurring additional expenses or premiums that would be as high as going for the previous two options.
- There's no hassle of buying a new term plan.

It's always better to opt for this cost-effective plan early in life.

9 Should you buy a term plan online or offline?

Many blogs or articles recommend you buy life insurance online. And they do have a strong case: online covers are cheaper as they eliminate the middlemen.

But in our view, you should keep the comfort and capability of your dependents or beneficiaries in mind. Since many of us are not tech-savvy or aren't aware of how to secure policy claims without the help of an agent, we think it's better to pay a slightly higher premium and purchase an offline plan than to see your loved ones run from pillar to post, especially when you are not around. But if they are tech-savvy, you can go ahead with an online plan.

Since many of us are not tech-savvy or aren't aware of how to secure policy claims without the help of an agent, it's better to pay a slightly higher premium and purchase an offline plan

10 Do you need a rider? If yes, which ones?

Riders are additional benefits to your insurance policy. You can choose them as per your requirements. Adding unnecessary riders needlessly adds to your premium. So, let's look at the ones you should have in your policy:

Critical illness: This rider can come in handy if you are diagnosed with a life-threatening disease. While health insurance is the standard defence in such cases, this additional benefit can protect your loved ones if you are out of work during your treatment. In such cases, getting a lump sum can cover that loss of income. A 30-year-old can get a ₹10 lakh rider for around ₹3,000.

Accidental death: If your job entails frequent travelling, we suggest adding this benefit. This extremely cost-effective rider will pay an additional sum to your loved ones in case of an unfortunate accident. For instance, a ₹20 lakh accidental-death rider costs in the ₹1,000 range for a 30-year-old person.

Accidental disability: The insurer will pay you a lump-sum handout in case of a partial or permanent disability after an accident. Generally, a ₹10 lakh rider costs around ₹300 for someone who is 30.

Waiver of premium: By signing up for this rider, you don't need to pay future premiums in case of an accident, death or disability. That said, most policies include them these days. If not, do check to eliminate any unnecessary stress during challenging times. This rider may come for around ₹300 for a 30-year-old.

11 How to ensure the insurance company doesn't reject your claim?

Section 45 of the Insurance Laws 2015 ensures that a life-insurance company cannot reject your claim, provided the term plan is at least three years old. Having said that, you must fully disclose your lifestyle choices and pre-existing and past medical conditions. Also, check the accuracy of the information provided in the document and keep the insurer updated if there are any changes. ☑
